Francois Menant
Docteur en Histoire. Professeur d’histoire médiévale. École Normale Supérieure, Département d’Histoire, 45 Rue d’Ulm, F-75230 Paris Cedex 05, Francia. C.e.: menant@ens.fr.
The Transformations of Charter Writing from the Twelfth through the Thirteenth Centuries (ES)
ABSTRACT: In high medieval Europe, documentary writing gained a new meaning, with the ‘practical turn’ it took around 1200. From then onwards, the production of written material increased growingly and new types of documents appeared, inspired by a sort of ‘final-balance spirit’. The administration of lordships, that of the nascent States and Italian cities, provided a scenario for such transformations; their ultimate expression is to be found in registers, fiscal and accounts ledgers, as well as sources of law and jurisprudence. Commercial and household records were a late development, although they had been within the competence of notaries for a long time. Our study concludes with an appraisal of the social reach of instruction, the goals of that new writing culture, and its archive systems.

Miguel Calleja-Puerta
Doctor en Historia. Profesor Titular de Universidad. Departamento de Historia, Facultad de Filosofía y Letras, Universidad de Oviedo, C/ Teniente Alfonso Martinez s/n, 33071, Oviedo, Asturias, España. C.e.: mcalleja@uniovi.es.
Chancery and Royal Power in the European West during the Long Twelfth Century (ES)
ABSTRACT: In the long twelfth century, most kingdoms in Western Europe extended their territories and enhanced their means of exercising power. This paper aims to explain the link between this process and the development of royal writing offices. As these kingdoms expanded, there was an increase in the need for larger numbers of charters to be issued: transmitting the king’s will and keeping an account of his revenues depended upon such writs. That is why the title of Chancellor would eventually disappear and be replaced by the activity of increasingly hierarchized notaries and anonymous clerks. Those chanceries were responsible for the issuing and validation of royal charters in the period. The growing importance of seals as signs of authenticity attests an interest in conferring public value to charters. The rise in the number of registers in royal chanceries reveals a generalised intent to preserve the memory of royal actions.
Benoît-Michel Tock
The Authors of the Twelfth-century Charters of the Abbey of Baupre, Diocese of Beauvais (FR)
ABSTRACT: The electronic reproduction of the unedited charters of the Cistercian Abbey of Beaupre, Diocese of Beauvais, allows for the study of their diplomatic features and, more particularly, offers the possibility of answering this question: To whom would the abbey apply for the confirmation of donations received? It was mainly from the bishops of Beauvais from whom the Abbey of Beaupre would request such documents, rather than from the too distant pope or the absent king. Save for a number of exceptions, not until the last decade of the century would the lay donors act as disposers of such deeds; prior to that, whenever they conferred a donation under reserve of payment of a yearly census, they would receive and retain a copy of the chirograph, readily produced for the occasion.

Guillermo Tomás Faci
The Construction of Written Memory in the Ecclesiastical Archives in Ribagorza, from the Eleventh to the Thirteenth Century (ES)
ABSTRACT: During the eleventh century, the main ecclesiastical institutions in Ribagorza and surrounding areas underwent a deep transformation and growth, through the intervention of monarchs and bishops. Starting then and up to 1150, the earlier archival materials were selected, compiled and modified; indeed, few documents survived that had not been made part of the resulting documentary products which will be analysed in this article. Within that context, there was a constant dialogue between the churchmen’s present and their immediate and distant past, which led to the construction of a coherent narrative of their history, intended to legitimize their present and secure their own interests.

Pierre Chastang
Archives, Government and Urban Communities in Southern France: The Case of Montpellier (ES)
ABSTRACT: This article deals with the medieval history of the urban archives of the city of Montpellier. In a first part, it offers the long history of these collections by tracing the important moments in the transmission and transformation of medieval documentation produced within the institutional framework of the Consulate established in 1204-1205. In a second part, the article examines the transformations that affected urban archival memory from the beginning of the thirteenth to the mid-fourteenth century and links these to changes in methods of governing the urban universitas. Two periods are singled out: the first spans through the 1250s and 1260s and is a first move towards the empowerment of the urban administrative sphere, with the compilation of landmark books and the turning of a part of the city’s archives into a Treasury. The second period runs through the mid-fourteenth century, when a thorough reorganization of the classification system of the archivum that will facilitate the consultation of documents takes place, as does an unprecedented increase in the control exercised by urban administrations over the production and conservation of urban records.

Pablo ABELLA VILLAR
Licenciado en Historia del Arte. C/ Noguera Ribagorçana, 2, 6º 3ª. 08014, Barcelona. C.e.: polsml@hotmail.com.

Monastic Infirmaries: Healing Spaces for Monk Communities in the High Middle Ages (ES)

ABSTRACT: Despite its great importance during the Middle Ages, the monks’ infirmary is among the less well known extra-claustral monastic spaces. This paper aims to clarify its functions and rules of procedure, as well as to define the type of patients it sheltered. Additionally, it deals with the study of its management by an infirmary brother and takes into account the role played by the physicians in the treatments accorded to the ill monks. Finally, the article is concerned with certain aspects related to the location of the monks’ infirmary within the monastic complex and its architectural features, and seeks to trace the origins of the common solutions that are to be found throughout the European medieval monastic world.

María ÁLVAREZ FERNÁNDEZ
Doctora en Historia. Profesor Ayudante Doctor. Departamento de Historia. Facultad de Filosofía y Letras. Universidad de Oviedo, C/ Teniente Alfonso Martínez, s/n, Campus de Humanidades, 33071, Oviedo, Asturias, España. C.e.: alvarezfmaria@uniovi.es.

Raúl GONZÁLEZ GONZÁLEZ
Licenciado en Historia, Graduado en Filología Románica. Becario predoctoral. Departamento de Historia, Facultad de Filosofía y Letras, Universidad de Oviedo, C/ Teniente Alfonso Martínez, s/n, Campus de Humanidades, 33071 Oviedo, Asturias, España. C.e.: raul@telecable.es.

Urban Space and Society in Late Medieval Oviedo: A Method Proposal (ES)

ABSTRACT: The aim of our paper is to offer a methodological model for the study of the relation between space and society in late medieval Spanish towns, a model framed within the elaborations of the so-called ‘Social Topography’, concerned with the social distribution of urban space, or, in other words, the study of spatial patterns as a reflection and stimulus for the social, political and economic relations that are established in the town; in short, a reciprocal conditioning between urban fabric and social structure, between "the town of stone and the town of men". Drawing on the case of Oviedo as an example, the use of certain analytical categories has helped us identify both the settlement patterns of the different social groups and the social features of the town’s main streets and neighbourhoods. In addition, the evidence showed that in some cases local elites left their physical imprint within the town by locating... their family estates in certain specific streets, with the aim of communicating through the buildings their privileged status among the local society. The best example of such ‘display of power’, sought after by the urban patriciate of Oviedo, is the Rúa Palace.

Margarita CABRERA SÁNCHEZ
Doctora en Filosofía y Letras. Profesora Titular de Universidad. Departamento de Ciencias de la Antigüedad y de la Edad Media, Facultad de Filosofía y Letras, Universidad de Córdoba, Plaza del Cardenal Salazar, 3, 14003 Córdoba, España. C.e.: ca1casam@uco.es.

Post-mortem preservation techniques applied to the members of medieval hispanic royalty (ES)

ABSTRACT: In this paper we try to show the kind of post-mortem preservation techniques that may have been applied to the members of the medieval Spanish royalty from the end of the thirteenth to the middle of the sixteenth century. For this, we have availed ourselves in particular of the information given by the historiographical witnesses and by some medical texts. From the information that has reached us, we can infer that the practice of embalming corpses was not generalized in the Iberian Peninsula during the high and late Middle Ages and did not, therefore, properly belong to the funeral ritual of the royalty.

Eduardo JUÁREZ VALERO
Doctor en Historia. Profesor Titular, AHA International Segovia, University of Oregon. Profesor-Tutor, Universidad Nacional de Educación a Distancia. Profesor Asociado, Universidad Carlos III, Departamento de Biblioteconomía y Documentación, Campus de Getafe, Edificio Concepción Arenal, Despacho 140224, Calle Madrid, 128, 28091 Getafe, Madrid, España. C.e.: ejuarez@bib.uc3m.es.

The Studium of Juan Arias Dávila, Bishop of Segovia (ES)

ABSTRACT: Diego de Colmenares’s seventeenth-century Historia de la insigne ciudad de Segovia records how, around 1466, Henry IV of Castile granted a 38,000-maravedi privilege to set up a studium in Segovia, where Philosophy, Grammar and Rhetoric should be taught. Nonetheless, no research study has yet yielded any news as to the structure, regulations and finance of the Segovia studium. This article tries to trace its origins, curricular plan and sources of income, in a attempt to bring to the fore this late-medieval institution of higher learning, so different from the others existing at the time.

Mario LAFUENTE GÓMEZ
Doctor en Historia. Profesor Ayudante Doctor. Área de Historia Medieval, Departamento de Historia Medieval, Ciencias y Técnicas Historiográficas y Estudios Árabes e Islámicos, Universidad de Zaragoza, Calle Pedro Cebuna 12, 50009 Zaragoza, España. C.e.: mariolg@unizar.es.

The Making of an Aristocratic Social Group: The Elite of the Lesser Nobility in Aragon, 1250-1350 (ES)
ABSTRACT: The goal of this paper is to describe the factors intervening in the rise of an aristocratic elite among the Aragonese lesser nobility between the mid-thirteenth and mid-fourteenth centuries, as well as their ascent into the ruling circles of the Aragonese feudal state. For this purpose, this work has been organized in two parts. The first part explains the characteristics common to the whole lesser nobility in the kingdom and the ones proper to those enjoying higher status, notably, military leadership and service to the king, the possession of seigneurial dominions and the preservation of a domestic network of affinities and alliances. The second part analyzes two of the means of power in the hands of this elite: the institutions linked to the monarchy and their sitting in the courts of Aragon. Two Annexes have been appended listing those Aragonese lesser nobles summoned by the king himself for five different offensive campaigns and five court assemblies, without interruption between 1300 and 1350.

KEYWORDS: Aragon. Late Middle Ages. Social History. Lesser Nobility. Power.

Ágatha ORTEGA CERA
Doctora en Historia. Profesora Ayudante Doctora. Departamento de Arqueología e Historia Medieval, Facultad de Filosofía y Letras, Universidad de Málaga, Campus de Teatinos s/n, 29071 Málaga, España. C.e.: aortega@uma.es.

THE FIEL, A MINOR CHARACTER? LEASING, FIELDAD AND BUSINESS IN FIFTEENTH-CENTURY CASTILE (ES)

ABSTRACT: The goal of this paper is to make known a tax-collection system that was as widely used in fifteenth-century Castile as is little known today: the fieldad. Among other things, in this essay I will be presenting the fieldad as a common, unexceptional system that is an integral part of leasing (as opposed to an independent or parallel method) and describing its core role in the fiscal business.